What Is MPFF And Why Is It Important?

MPFF is micronized purified flavonoid fraction. This combination of flavonoids includes diosmin, hesperidin, and other important bioflavonoids. Flavonoids exist naturally in the rind of citrus fruits. Many scientific and clinical research studies conducted over the last several decades, indicate that these compounds have health benefits in people with chronic venous disease. In fact, there is significant scientific agreement about the role MPFF plays in patients with certain vein problems. Numerous well respected medical societies, represented by key opinion leaders and educators in the field of venous and lymphatic medicine have included MPFF in their guidelines for the treatment of varicose veins, venous edema, and leg ulcers when used in combination with compression therapy.*
